Introduction

Every moment in business happens only once. The next Bill Gates will not build an operating system. The next Larry Page won't make a search engine. If you are copying these guys, you aren't learning from them. Doing what we already know how to do takes the world from 1 to n, adding more of something familiar. But every time we create something new, we go from 0 to 1.

Chapter 1: The Challenge of the Future

What valuable company is nobody building? This question is harder than it looks, because your company could create a lot of value without becoming very valuable itself. Creating value is not enough—you also need to capture some of the value you create.

Chapter 2: Party Like It's 1999

The dot-com crash taught Silicon Valley four big lessons that still guide business thinking today: 1) Make incremental advances, 2) Stay lean and flexible, 3) Improve on competition, 4) Focus on product, not sales. But these lessons have become dogma that prevent innovation.

Chapter 3: All Happy Companies Are Different

Monopoly is the condition of every successful business. All failed companies are the same: they failed to escape competition. Competition is for losers. If you want to create and capture lasting value, don't build an undifferentiated commodity business.
